PREFACE

ONDON has developed from a city of one square mile in area to a county of one hundred and twenty square miles with numerous populous centres all round beyond this huge area. It is the largest city in the world, with a population of close upon five millions, or, reckoning the outlying suburban fringes, of nearly seven millions. Its network of streets, as indicated by this map, extends to a total length of two thousand one hundred and fifty-one miles and includes some of the most beautiful as also some of the most miserable streets that a great capital city can possess. There are practically no straight streets in London, unless Regent Street be so considered, but the irregularities constitute a great charm which wins upon the lovers of London. And even such monotony as exists in our irregular streets is relieved first of all by a series of admirably placed parks and open spaces (coloured green on the map) and secondly, by the almost unique feature of "squares" (the principal ones also coloured green). London squares came into vogue about the end of the eighteenth century. Houses are built round a common garden of a more or less square shape, sometimes with their backs to the common garden, more generally with frontages to a roadway which skirts the common garden in the centre.

The river Thames flows through the centre of London and is spanned by a series of bridges. It is the origin and cause of London's greatness, and helps to make it a beautiful city, a city from which Turner has drawn inspiration for his pictures and Wordsworth for his poetry.

The name of London is Celtic in origin, and was originally applied to a Celtic stronghold constructed on the site upon part of which St. Paul's Cathedral now stands. The Roman city was the foundation of the city and the city was, until the middle of the eighteenth century, enclosed within the mediæval walls constructed on the site planned by the Romans.

The name of London is now properly and legally applied to two well defined areas, the original city and the county constituted by the Local Government Act, 1888. The city is the centre of the business world of London. It contains the Bank of England, the head offices of the great banking and insurance companies, and the offices and warehouses of the principal merchants. The city churches, nearly one hundred in number, are a conspicuous feature, while the great cathedral of St. Paul's, Wren's masterpiece, dominates the city as the principal feature from whatever point the city is seen. The county completely surrounds the city, extending from Bow on the east to Hammersmith on the west, from Hampstead on the north to Tooting on the south, and taking in Hackney on the north-east, Woolwich on the south-east, and extending to Putney on the south-west. It contains the Houses of Parliament and the whole of the Government offices, the Mint, Trinity House, the Law Courts, the Inns of Court, the Tower of London, the cathedral church of Southwark, the Abbey Church of Westminster, the Roman Catholic cathedral church, the arsenal of Woolwich, the King's Palace, the town residence of the Prince of Wales, the town houses of most of the nobility and aristocracy, and the palaces of the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of London. It is the seat of two bishoprics, namely London and Southwark. It contains Eltham Palace, one of the favourite residences of the Kings of England, particularly of Henry VIII. and including Charles I.; Greenwich Palace, which Henry VIII., Queen Mary and Queen Elizabeth occupied; Kensington Palace, where William III., Mary II., Anne, and George II. died and Queen Victoria was born; and many beautiful buildings of historic importance. All the principal railway terminus stations are in the county. It has also very large manufacturing and industrial centres which make London the largest manufacturing city in the world. And it is the centre of all institutions for amusements, the Albert Hall, and all the theatres, music halls, hotels. The University of London and its schools and colleges are also situated in the county, as are the British Museum, the Natural History Museum, South Kensington Museum, the National Gallery, the National Portrait Gallery, the Tate Gallery, the Wallace Collection, and other galleries and museums. It is the seat also of all the principal learned societies, located chiefly at Burlington House, and of Greenwich Observatory upon which practically the time of the world is based.

The county is administered for municipal purposes by the County Council, the City of London Corporation and twenty-eight metropolitan borough councils. For Poor Law purposes it is administered by the Metropolitan Asylums Board and thirty-one Boards of Guardians. And it will be gathered that the jurisdiction of these local bodies, covering though it does the whole County of London, is not conterminous in its local organization. Indeed the complexity and confusion of the London administrative areas are considerable drawbacks to its efficiency and economy. The Guildhall of the City of London is the principal municipal building at present in London; the new County Hall now being erected on the banks of the Thames at the eastern end of Westminster Bridge will not be completed until about 1916.

The term "metropolis" was formerly applied to what is now the county as well as to other administrative areas. This term was first used in connection with the commissions of sewers which were instituted in the reign of Henry VIII., the several commissions being finally amalgamated into the Metropolitan Commission in 1847. It now only applies to those areas which, sometimes including both the city and county of London, sometimes excluding the city and including the county only in a larger area, are subject to the special jurisdiction of various authorities. These jurisdictions are of a most conflicting and puzzling character, and have arisen during the long period before the year 1888 when London was growing to its greatness without being endowed with any municipal government. These jurisdictions may be shortly described.

The area of jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Court includes the City of London, the counties of London and Middlesex, together with parts of the counties of Essex, Surrey and Kent, and the high seas.

The Metropolitan Police area extends to parishes coming within a radius of fifteen miles from Charing Cross, and thus extends from Hatfield on the north to Epsom on the south, from Staines on the west to Dartford on the east.

The Metropolitan Police Court District extends over the county of London with the exception of a part of Hampstead.

The Metropolitan Water Board administers an area different from all of these, being composed of the areas formerly within the supplies of each of the eight water companies, not so extensive on the whole as the Metropolitan Police area though extending beyond that area in various directions, particularly into Ware, Romford, and Sevenoaks.

The London Parliamentary area is practically the County of London except that certain adjustments have been made in the county boundary which have not been carried out in the Parliamentary boundary.

The Port of London Authority has the administration of all the Docks and of the river from about two miles below the Nore to Teddington.

Besides these there are some special jurisdictions in London which should be mentioned. The Thames Conservancy has charge of the river above Teddington and therefore of some of the sources of London's water supply. The Main Drainage system of the County Council includes not only the whole county, but West Ham, a small part of East Ham, Tottenham, Wood Green, parts of Hornsey and Willesden, Acton, and small portions of Chiswick and Ealing outside the county on the north side of the Thames, and Penge, with parts of Croydon and Beckenham and a small portion of Mitcham on the south side. The Trinity House has charge of the port of London for purposes of lighthouses and other lights, pilotage and other services. The Lord Chamberlain has licensing jurisdiction over London Theatres other than patent theatres in respect of plays to be performed within an area comprising practically the whole of the eastern and central portions of the county north of the Thames, and the north part of the central portion of the county south of the river.

Gas supply is in the hands of private companies and extends beyond the county area on the west, in the south-west and on the east. Electricity is confined to the smaller areas within the county and is partly administered by the Borough Councils and partly by private companies.

To these administrative areas constituted by statutory authority must be added the Metropolitan Postal District, which is created by H.M. Post Office for the convenience of telegraph and postal purposes. It extends far beyond the London area (except at Woolwich) and has no relationship to other areas, but depends simply upon the facilities for collecting and distributing the postal service.

All these different jurisdictions constitute areas for the purpose only of special services which have resulted for the most part from the past state of chaos in London Government. They make it almost impossible for resident Londoners to understand London administration, and quite impossible for strangers, unless they devote some time to its study.

Looking over this map, one is conscious of the vast area which it embraces. Workers in the centre no longer live at or near their place of work—neither the employer nor the employed. They travel to and fro morning and night. The principal roadways which form the main arteries from and into London are gradually being supplied with tramways by the County Council, though there are still considerable districts, principally in the north-west and west, which are without this necessary means of popular locomotion. Tube underground railways and motor omnibuses supply to some extent this deficiency, but London more than any other city in the world needs a perfect system of locomotion between all its parts, for workers cannot walk the distances.

Changes will come over this great city as time produces its inevitable changes in modes of life, but there is a solidity about London which, with its wonderful capacity to attract even the most superficial people, tells for practical continuity of existing conditions under improved and improving circumstances. London is the capital of the British Empire in no formal sense, neither by statute nor appointment. It is so by right of its pre-eminence among the cities of the whole world. It is the capital because it has no rival.

LAURENCE GOMME.

NOTE.

The maps in the Atlas numbered 1 to 84, are coloured to show :—

In red, the boundaries of the Metropolitan Boroughs, and of the adjacent Municipal Boroughs, Urban Districts, and Rural Districts ;

In green, the Parks and Open Spaces ;

In blue, the principal waters (rivers, lakes, canals) ;

In brown, the roads on which Tramway rails are laid.
